LOCATION AND CLIMATE

Portoroz is one of the most famous and vivid Slovenian towns. On the cca 40 km long Slovenian coast, it is situated in a bay, sheltered from the winds by the peninsula of Piran. With its sub-Mediterranean climate, Portoroz belongs to one of the warmest parts of Slovenia, with approximately 2346 sunny days annually. Mild winters that rarely go under 0°C and not too warm summers are characteristic for this area.

HISTORY AND SIGHTS

Portoroz is named after the church of St. Mary of Roses, built in this area in the 13th century, hence the name Porto Rose ("the port of roses") for the port. This area was inhabited by many nations: the Langobards (Lombards), the Avars, the Slavs, the French, the Venetians, the Austrians and finally the Italians who reigned the territory until the end of the Second World War. In the Middle Ages, the Benedictines started to develop the health tourism. They used the concentrated sea salt and sea mud from the nearby salt works to heal rheumatic and skin diseases. Not before the 19th century does the health tourism start to flourish and many villas and hotels for tourists started to be built.
